

Libby Ellis
Director of Development

Libby joined Rowland Hall as the director of development in 1996. She comes to us with a plethora of professional experiences. Most recently, prior to Rowland Hall, she served as the director of the Trustee and Board Development Program for the Nature Conservancy in Washington DC where she helped develop board leadership, governance, and training for national and international programs.

Prior to that experience, she worked as the director of marketing and philanthropy for the Nature Conservancy in Utah. She also worked for Patagonia, Inc. for eight years both in Utah and California as a store manager and the director of the Environmental Program worldwide.

She has BS in Textile Design and a minor in business from the University of Wisconsin-Stout. In addition, Libby and her husband Stuart Ruckman have a son here at the school.
